Two new publications aimed at acquainting prospective students with programs and procedures at The Evergreen State College at Olympia were issued this week through the office of Director of Admissions David W. Brown.

Washington's newest public four-year college--authorized by the 1967 legislature opens in September, 1971. Processing of applications for admissions will begin early in 1971, following publication of Evergreen's first catalog.

One of the new publications is a small brochure which briefly discusses the climate for learning at Evergreen. It is designed solely to spur student requests for further, more detailed information about first-year academic programs.

The second publication, entitled "Preliminary Bulletin", is a 16-page illustrated book which discusses Evergreen's goals and objectives, the kinds of academic program options that will be available on opening day, admissions policies and procedures, tuition and other costs, housing, counseling services, financial aid, and physical facilities.

"These publications were prepared to give prospective students of all ages some preliminary information about what will be available at Evergreen next September," Brown said. "Most students already have started serious college planning and we're receiving dozens of inquiries each week. These two publications will provide students an information bridge between now and the time the catalog--which will carry specific details about programs, policies and procedures--is off the presses."
