Two buildings at The Evergreen State College have won recognition in the 1974 Honor Awards Program of the Southwest Washington Chapter of the American Institute of Architects.

One structure--the College Recreation Center designed by the Tacoma architectural firm of Robert Price and Associates--received an Honor Award for distinguished accomplishment in architecture.

The other--the college's Central Utilities Plant designed by Bennett, Johnson, Slenes and Smith, Architects of Olympia--received a Merit Award.

Program entrées were not only judged on the basis of competition but also on the architect's solution to the design problem presented, as well as a project's worthiness for an architectural award of excellence.

The selection jury included Gerald Williams, Seattle architect; Keith Kolb, Seattle architect and Associate Professor in the College of Architecture and Urban Planning at the University of Washington; Reider Dittman, U of W architectural student; and Saul Zaik, Portland architect.

Evergreen building project work--from design to construction and operation--is coordinated by the college's Director of Facilities, Jerry L. Schillinger.
