John A. Sells, 54, of Shelton has been retained as a construction coordinator by The Evergreen State College at Olympia, according to Jerry L. Schillinger, Director of Facilities Planning.

A construction coordinator and inspector for 22 years, Sells will serve as liaison between architects and contractors during building of student residential facilities, scheduled for a work start in June. He will be assigned construction coordination responsibilities for other projects at a later date.

Major projects with which Sells has been associated in recent years include the Fairhaven complex at Western Washington State College, Mason County General Hospital, the Washington Corrections Center at Shelton and a new residence hall at Washington State University.

Sells is one of three construction coordinators working on projects at the new college. Retained earlier were Don Mace, formerly of Richland, and Neal M. Jacques of Kent. Mace is associated with construction of the college library. Jacques, a licensed civil engineer and formerly employed by the Boeing Airplane Company, has been retained by Quinton-Budlong Engineers of Seattle, for coordination of a major site improvement project, slated for contract in early June.
